TEACHING EXPERIENCE

Stanford University

2022 Stanford Black Academic Lab: Community-Based Participatory Methods (EDUC 488/LING 276E)

This lab-based course is an overview of research methods that are used in the development of Black educators, including survey research, individual and focus group interviews, ethnographic methods, and documentary activism. Lab participants will be guided through critical thinking about the professional and personal development of Black educators while assessing the utility and relevance of research-based responses to that development in partnership with a particular educational organization or agency.

2021 Proseminar: Teaching and Learning (EDUC 325A)

This course, the first in the doctoral pro-seminar sequence, focuses on learning and teaching. Teaching and learning are the crux of education, but that does not mean everyone has the same conception of what teaching and learning are nor does it mean the ideas have stayed consistent over time. It is true, however, that historical ideas as well as dominant conceptions of teaching and learning have shaped the nature of schooling in ways that are beneficial to some and detrimental to others. Therefore, we will spend time with seminal pieces that shaped teaching and learning as we know it and key works that challenge the status quo

Graduate courses

2021 Educational Linguistics (LING 248)

This two-quarter seminar gives graduate students an overview of educational linguistics across models and methods. Students will have two major assignments for the class. In the winter quarter, we will create an education or linguistics integration plan that will include a literature review and action plan based on previous work and research interests. In the spring quarter, we will further develop that plan with a focus on establishing or strengthening actual educational partnerships.

2020 Scholarly Communication in Linguistics (LING 258 A&B)

This two-quarter seminar gives graduate students an overview of scholarly communication in linguistics. In the fall quarter, we focus on publication including but not limited to: publishing journal articles, book chapters, and books. We also examine multimedia communication, including: giving research talks, job talks, giving interviews and writing and making videos and podcasts for the public and mass media. In the spring quarter, we focus on reviewing, editing, and the politics and economics of publishing in linguistics and related areas.

2019 Passages: The Transition to Social and Professional Life After Graduate School: How to run the LSA, the UC, and the world! (LING 258 A&B)

This two-quarter seminar focuses on the transition from graduate school into professional academic and research life. In the seminar, we explore the influence that linguists have had at UCSB and in the UC; within the disciplines of linguistics, anthropology, and education; in higher education; and in the world at large.

2019 Community Based Research Methods in Language, Literacy, & Culture (LING 248)

Survey of community-based participatory research methods used in language-, literacy-, and culture-related research and work, including survey research, individual and focus group interviewing, ethnographic field methods, and documentary activism. The class works as a community to develop fundable research proposals.

2018 African-American Language & Culture (LING 236)

This advanced sociolinguistics seminar examines the linguistic, literary, cultural, and communicative aspects of African-American Language across the African-American Diaspora. It blends diachronic and synchronic methodologies in order to create community-based participatory research approaches to the study of African-Americans and their language.

Undergraduate courses

2018 African-American English (LING 36)

This introductory level course examines the sociolinguistic aspects of English as spoken by African-Americans in the United States and studies the relationship of African-American English to linguistic theory, education policy, and U.S. culture. The course has an emphasis on mitigating discrimination and improving the educational and social experiences of African-Americans at UCSB and beyond.

The College of William and Mary

2017 Multicultural Education (CMST 306)

Students receive funding for off-campus community engagement in this application-based course.

- 2016 Passages: The Transition of Underrepresented Scholars to Graduate and Professional School (AFST 306)
- This WMSURE-affiliated seminar prepares students for graduate and professional school with a focus on what it means to be underrepresented and the impact of research by underrepresented scholars on academia.
- 2016 Community-Based Research Methods (CMST 351)
- Survey of community-based participatory research methods, including survey research, individual and focus group interviewing, ethnographic field methods, and documentary activism. Also taught in Spring 2010, 2011, 2013, and 2015.
- 2015 Seminar on Language Attitudes in the United States (LING 410, ENGL 474, CMST 250, AFST 306)
- This upper-level research seminar emphasizes methodology and critical analysis of research on language attitudes and discrimination. Also taught in Fall 2005, 2007, and Spring 2010, 2011, 2014.
- 2012-17 Workshops on Language and Culture
- Led 12-15 workshops a year on education, language, and culture in courses at the School of Education, School of Law, and in Arts and Sciences.
- 2012-17 Workshops for the WMSURE program
- Facilitated and led workshops at least once a week year-round designed to create a strong peer network of underrepresented students on the William and Mary campus successful in research experiences. Led additional workshops for faculty to support student research.
- 2012 Linguistics Lab (INTR 480)
- Independent study-focused course designed to give students opportunities to participate in ongoing research projects at the intersection of Africana Studies, education, English, linguistics, and community studies.

- 2011 Language and New Media: Georgetown Roundtable in Linguistics Conference Reading Course (ENGL 464)
- This one-credit course offers students the opportunity to prepare for, attend, and reflect upon a conference focusing on current research in language and new media, an expanding and lively area of research in contemporary linguistics.
- 2010 Language and Society (ENGL 406/ANTH 413)
- A study of the place of language in society and of how our understanding of social structure, conflict and change affect our understanding of the nature of language.
- 2010 Swahili Language and Culture (ENGL 464 /AFST 306)
- This independent study focuses on literary, historical and cultural aspects of Swahili-speaking regions. Students work with a language tutor on Swahili speaking and writing skills. Co-taught with Martin Shanguhya.
- 2010 Language Variation in the Classroom: An Educator's Toolkit (TEDU 500)
- A three-credit graduate course for the School of Education. Co-taught with Christine Mallinson. Invited.
Also taught in Summer 2009.
- 2009 Study of Language (ENGL 220/ANTH 204)
- Introductory linguistics course with a focus on language and education.
Also taught in Fall 2005.
- 2008 American Speech (ENGL 464)
- Mid-level course on language variation in North America. Students conduct interviews and analyze a language variety of their choice. Opportunities for service-learning placements were available.
- 2007 Alternative Education in Williamsburg (INTR 450)
- Upper-level course research seminar on approaches to Alternative Education with focus on grant writing as an approach to service learning (bundle of 7 independent studies).
- 2007 Sharpe Scholars Freshman Writing Seminar: Language Variation and African-American Vernacular English (ENGL 150W)

Service-learning writing-intensive seminar. Focus on language and culture of African-American students.

Linguistic Society of America Summer Institutes

2019 Language and Racialization (Course 354)

This course examines the ways in which linguistic theories and racial theories have co-evolved, investigates the role of race in linguistics and the role of language in racial thinking, and identifies ways in which linguists are in a key position to help with scholarly and societal understandings of race. This course has a particular emphasis on creating resources and strategies for supporting anti-racist efforts within linguistics. Co-taught with Mary Bucholtz and Tracy Conner. University of California, Davis. Invited.

2017 Language and Education

Aligned with the strategic mission of the Linguistic Society of America, this course uses sociolinguistic and multicultural education lenses to examine and increase the impact of linguistics on educational theory and practice. The course has an emphasis on both Pre-K-12 and higher education and the scholarship of teaching and learning within linguistics. University of Kentucky. Invited.

2006 Minority Dialects and The Acquisition of Literacy (LING 370)

This three-credit graduate course examines critical issues in the acquisition of literacy for speakers of minority dialects of English with the goal of applying linguistic knowledge to reverse reading failure. Co-taught with William Labov. Stanford University. Invited.
